Chicago, IL: Couples Foodie Weekend

My wife and I recently spent a few days in Chicago on a couples foodie weekend where we visited some of the city's very best dining venues. Chicago naturally has a lot of amazing dining options, so we couldn't visit them all in a few days, but I think we did hit the highlights. Here is a quick review of everywhere we visited, all of which were amazing. A word of warning though: this is not a budget conscious list (in fact the dinner at Moto Restaurant is the most expensive, and memorable, I've ever had - see below).

In order by what meal we ate (breakfast, lunch, dinner) all of the dining establishments we visited were locally owned & operated (no national chains).

Signature Room at the 95th

Located atop the John Hancock Tower this restaurant is known for its amazing sweeping views of the Chicago skyline. The views from our table and throughout the restaurant were breathtaking, and worth visiting the Signature Room all on their own. The food was also very good; the menu is not extensive (this wasn't a Cheesecake Factory), but featured several very high-quality lunch options. We had a great apple & cheese salad, and I had perfectly presented & prepared salmon. You will need a reservation to eat here as it is very popular, but well worth it for the good food and amazing views of Chicago!
